MALTESE PLANT NAMES

By J. AQUILINA

The most significant legacy of the Arabs in Malta is the arabization of the language spoken by the native population during the previous dominations. In my paper 'Maltese as a Mixed Language' included in my 'PAPERS IN MALTESE LINGUISTICS' (1961), I indicated a number of social contexts the expression of which incorporates the usage of a large number of Arabic words. The sixth heading in this article is entitled: 'Fruits, trees, flowers, herbs and vegetables' (page 51). Under this heading, I wrote that 'these are Semitic with some exceptions such as the word frott, "fruit", from It. frutta (Ar. fa:kiba); kaboċċa, "cabbage" from Sic. cappucciu; pastard, sometimes called fjura, originally an adjective, "cauliflower", Sic. bastardu.' In this study based on Guido Lanfranco's book: FIELD GUIDE TO THE WILD FLOWERS OF MALTA (1969), I have classified Maltese wild plants under two headings: those which, even if not traceable to another Arabic dialect, are linguistically Semitic formations, and those that are etymologically easily traceable to Sicilian or Italian. The net result of this comparative study is that we can say that Malta owes the vocabulary of its wild plants to Arabic even if some of them are local formations from existing roots (the larger number) and to Italian or Sicilian (the smaller number).
